

Risk Warning

1. The index-linked Snowball product is a long-term investment tool, and its main function is to diversify investments and reduce the individual risks brought by investing in a single security. Our products are different from financial instruments such as bank savings and bonds that can provide fixed income expectations. Investors who purchase Snowball products may share the income generated by the investment according to their holdings, and may also bear the losses brought by the investment.

2. The product may face various risks during the investment operation process, including market risks, as well as the product's own management risks, technical risks and compliance risks. The risk of large-scale redemption is a risk unique to this product, that is, when the net redemption application of the product on a single trading day exceeds 10% of the total shares of the product, the investor may not be able to redeem all the fund shares held in time.

3. There are many types of Snowball products. Investors will get different income expectations and bear different degrees of risks when investing in different types of products. Generally speaking, the higher the expected income of the product, the greater the risk borne by the investor.

4. Investors should fully understand the difference between regular fixed-amount investment and savings methods such as zero-deposit and lump-sum withdrawal of Snowball products. Regular fixed-amount investment is a simple and easy investment method to guide investors to make long-term investments and average investment costs. However, regular fixed-amount investment cannot avoid the risks inherent in product investment, cannot guarantee investors' returns, and is not an equivalent financial management method to replace savings.
